When he set foot on French soil he was welcomed by the President of the French republic, the French Premier and a vast concourse of French people. For the better part of a week thereafter he was the idol of Paris and the guest of France—ladged within the guest of France—lodged within slight of the Tomb of Napoleon, he was attended every day, and all day by long queues of Parlaians, who were happy enough to be rewarded for their salutations by his smile. And now his visit to the French nation being over and his visit to the British nation having begun, he is being received in England with the same riot of rejoicing, and he is housed under the rooftree of the King.

It was so with Robert Clive when he swept up from his desk in the trading office of India to become almost before he could have been aware of it founder and father of our Indian empire. It was so with the elder Pitt when, caught up by a wave of colossal egotism, he declared in the darkest hour England had yet known that he could save her and nobody else could, and then did it, being carried along with his country on a mighty current of fortunate events, which politicians called luck and historians have called chance, but which students of the laws of life know to have been the roll of the world waves which at great mioments of human upheaval sweep nations to the height of their destiny and lift men who stand for them to dazzling eminence.

SWEEPING WPTH HIM

It has been so with President Wilson, and no previous American President, not even Lincoln, nor yet Washington, though both took the helm at the top of the flood and guided their glip of state through coast shoals as difficult as Wilson found in his way, ever had the world tide so sweepingly with him. It was nearly impossible to be President of the United States during the past four years and not become a world figure after the war.

To say this is to make no deduction from the rightful reward of President Wilson's capitaincy. Perhaps there were moments during the first two years when some of us thought his vessel was long in being launched and that it was even in danger of being stuck in the chocks, but, once under way, there could be no misglving about her fate, for she was burt to the measure SWEEPING WPTH HIM (Continued on Second Page.)

FEAR SERIOUS TROUBLE PEAR SERIOUS TROUBLE

NEW YORK, December 49.—The theory of a league of nations is no new discovery, but is thousands of years old, having appeared in various forms and failed of its purpose in successive ages, declared Senator Reed, of Missouri, in an address at a dinner of the Society of Arts and Sciences here to-night.

the society of Arts and Sciences here to-night.

He predicted the plan would not "stand the acid test of reason and experience," and, in explaining what he believed was meant by a league of nations, said generally the proposal embraced every sort of intellectual vagary and poetic fancy.

"It is referred to as 'a parliament of man and confederation of the world," he continued, "which, as I understand it, is a sort of international mutual admiration society, with the sermon on the mount for a constitution and the apostolic creed for a guide."

station and the apostone creed for a guide."

Senator Reed attacked the proposed league as a surrender of the rights for which the American revolutionists fought and a violation of the warning of "the fathers of the rapublic against entangling alilances." The creation of the league, he asserted, would mean the transfer to European governments of the powers of the Congress of the United States to declare war, maintain its armies and navy, suppress revolutions and repel invasions.

Hot Bath Wins Victory Over London Telephone

How can a poetess of passion write her passionate poems when she is denied the luxury of her accustomed hot baths? She Just can't, at least Elin Wheeler Wilcox couldn't. In the London club where Mrs. Wilcox was stopping the hot bath is not listed among the essentials. The telephone is, however, and the instrument happened to be incated just where it prevented the installation of her bathub with its elevated shower. It took miles and miles of red tape, and finally a poem of passion in her most approved style, dedicated to the controller of telephones, before she succeeded in having the offending instruser: removed. Then the tub was installed, the hot streams turned on, and the poem will be published as an official document of the telephone company. Hayden Church, in his "Literary Gossip" for The Times-Dispatch, tells this aneedote about Mrs. Wilcox to-morrow.

"I am unable to speak for the commissioners, but I can give you the sentiment of the Japanese people. They heartly favor a league, provided it really develops as President Wilson plans."

"Why the conditions? Isn't President Wilson's plan understood by the Japanese?"

"Permit me to ask a question," continued my informant. "In the league of nations will all have equality before an international court, as every man is theoretically equal before the common law?"

"Yes," replied the laterylewer.

"A league of nations is a league of peoples, isn't it?"

"That would seem a corollary to President Wilson's insistence upon the self-determination of peoples." "Then," rejoined the Japanese, "all peoples shall be equal in the league?"
